Recent advances in near-infrared spectroscopy in medicine. Near-infrared spectroscopy (NIRS) is a widely used, non-invasive method in medical research. Here we review the use of NIRS in different medical fields, with a particular emphasis on the use of NIRS in the field of cardiology, for example in the prediction of myocardial infarction. We focus on the use of transcutaneous NIRS (tNIRS) to measure changes in cerebral blood oxygenation and on the use of brain-reactive NIRS (brNIRS) for the study of the central and autonomic nervous system. As your reading this, there is a link on my website, "Bulk Food Storage for Survival." The link will take you to information on how to get maximum storage, and get the greatest return for your food storage dollars. It will also explain why you need to learn to store and prepare a variety of foods in case of EMP or any other disasters. When I give seminars on food storage, I teach the audience about more than food storage. I also teach the audience about preparing for disasters like a power outage, earthquake, or tornado. We do not want to be unprepared for any potential disasters, and that is why I teach people that their first line of defense are their food storage supplies. These supplies are always in their house. If you have been preparing for a disaster for
