NotiFyX News Version 1.4.2.0 improves the message reading time, the clock, and fixes some minor bugs. After a long time of no news, it is time to inform you that NotiFyX is back and is ready to serve you. After a long absence we brought some changes in NotiFyX v1.4.1.0, the biggest being the reduction of memory used, the option to show messages more than one time, the updated notifications regarding the messages received and the ability to add (and delete) custom rules that can help you learn when new emails arrive. NotiFyX v1.4.1.0 also gives you the option to display the alert sounds or not and if you want to be able to close NotiFyX from inside it. This new version is also the first one available for Windows 10 and it has all the needed features for it. The first thing that you notice when you open NotiFyX is the new look. The interface has been improved by adding more details, a better design and that is definitely the main news for this new version. The old menu has been replaced by a new one, where you can find a search bar and a Gmail icon that will show the number of unread messages in your Gmail account. This is a useful feature because you don't need to open a browser or a web browser to check your Gmail messages. There is also a set of options that you can change to customize the way NotiFyX works. In this new version, there is also a version for Windows 10. Main changes in NotiFyX v1.4.1.0: NotiFyX is a GTK3 application but it is now compatible with Windows 10. Now, with NotiFyX v1.4.1.0 you can add new messages more than one time. The new options of the notifications have been improved. NotiFyX now has its own clock and you can customize it. There is now a new way to close NotiFyX. Some bugs have been fixed. NotiFyX

(Windows 7, 8 and 8.1) You have the option to choose to use notifications or not. If you don't want to use them you can still close NotiFyX from inside the program, as well as change the color of the icon. The sound notifications are based on the ones that you can hear in
