A: Nothing bad about it. Should we consider it a good/bad coding practice? It is a good coding practice. Its a feature that gets you points. Its a funny feature so people love it and they upvote it. Thoughts and musings from a young Canadian Christian travelling the world, with a focus on culture and ministry. Saturday, January 14, 2010 Winning. Over the past few days, I've watched two funny cartoons. The first one was an episode of Old School called: "Winning". It's a combination of a cartoon short and a movie. The theme of the story revolves around the three foot tall sports star who is part of a professional foot ball club. The team is terrible and they are about to lose the game. Through a lot of suspense and scandal, the team and the manager gets help in a totally unorthodox way: the half-men human foot model hired to do the team's shoe adverts. The half men come through and they help the team. After the game, the team is jubilant about their victory and the manager is so shocked and touched by their win that he starts crying. Like how in "The Onion News Network" you get ads for porn, you get ads for sports. And "Old School" actually highlighted the need for such ads. It isn't so much that there needs to be a sexist advertisement, it's
