Rečnik i isopija. - Toms Q: How to sort boost variant container in a certain order? I have a variant container with several types of the same base type. The variant is initialized with a certain order, and I want to sort it so that it is initialized in the same order. Here is an example: boost::variant myVec(MyType1, MyType1, MyType2, MyType3); boost::variant myVec2(MyType4, MyType1, MyType3, MyType2); I want to sort the two vectors to be exactly like this: std::vector vec; std::vector vec2; Is there an easy way to do this? A: You can perform a std::merge in a loop until the desired container gets filled, by passing an initializer_list to the function. You can then use the updated containers as usual. auto it = std::begin(vec); do { std::merge(it, std::end(vec), std::begin(vec2)); } while (std::next(it) != std::end(vec)); Caveat: this is not portable; see the comments at the end of this post. I don't recommend using std::vector, as it doesn't work with variant. Variants are intended for homogeneous containers, so using an alternate container is not an example of an appropriate usage. You should also note that
