The present invention relates to an apparatus for unloading a large quantity of particulate materials such as coal into containers in a pile in a manner that facilitates the handling of the containers, and particularly to an apparatus for unloading coal from railroad cars into containers in a pile in a manner that facilitates the handling of the containers after they are filled. According to previous methods, coal from a railroad car is unloaded by a long hose extending from a truck attached to a railroad car directly into a bin of a hopper which is set in a dump truck. Typically, a truck and an end of a hose are driven to a bin where coal is to be unloaded, and the truck is used to shift the bin which is then tilted so that coal in the bin is emptied into the truck. An example of such a system is seen in U.S. Pat. No. 5,265,928. A drawback of this method is that it is difficult to transfer the empty bin to another bin without tilting the bin and it requires a number of individuals to operate and position the bin. Further, a hose connected to the truck may be dropped due to its length. According to previous methods, hopper cars having a hopper that is open at one end and toward the center may be loaded at a point as close as the center, as shown in U.S. Pat. No. 4,275,764. However, such methods require a complicated conveyor system to transport loaded bins from the hopper to a bin of a hopper of a bin car, and may not be adapted for a large number of bins and/or bins in a pile. According to previous methods, bins may be transported to a location outside of the rail system using railroad hoppers, as shown in U.S. Pat. No. 4,027,698. However, they typically have individual lids which are held in place by braces which are in turn held in place by connectors which are formed at the ends of the lids. The braces and connectors require a large number of components and are difficult to assemble and inspect. A number of patents show containers having a top lid which is manually lifted and tilted when a container is filled, as seen in U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,316,380; 6,142,345; 6,199,727; and 6,244,608. However, they typically have individual lids which are held in place by braces which are in turn held in place by
