Architecture In terms of design process and related features, the following hierarchy of application functionality is typical of most (if not all) software design applications, whether desktop or mobile:

- Inputs – accept user input to design problems and perform calculations based on the input
- Drawings – create drawings and manipulate them as required
- Graphics – display drawings and perform calculations based on drawing input
- Reports – create reports based on drawings and drawings with analysis Design tools - design objects and operations to meet drawing and report requirements Information management - manage information and report information in a database Modeling - create and manipulate three-dimensional (3D) objects in a virtual space The AutoCAD toolset is comprised of functionality in each category; the software itself is designed to be easily upgraded and enhanced through user created macros, scripts, plug-ins, add-ons, etc. The input and graphics functions are based on an event-driven architecture, with events based on user input triggering the generation of calculations. The results of the calculations are then displayed in the graphics window. The drawings are created as sets of objects with static and/or dynamic properties, each of which is subject to various forms of measurement, modification and rendering, using various functions. The functions performed by the graphics subsystem can be broken down into three distinct components:

---

- Rendering - display the objects defined by the drawings in the graphics window
- Measurement - capture the measurements of objects, which are typically used to create reports
- Analysis - perform calculations on the objects based on the specified inputs

Exodus 15:8-16King James Version (KJV) 8 And Moses and the children of Israel sang this song, and they said, Surely Jehovah hath triumphed, he hath done according to all that he did declare unto Moses. 9

And all the people rose up early in the morning, and they brought forth bread, and parched it, and honey, and the Come not near to it; that all of you may see the good day, to go in and to take thereof. 11 And Moses said unto Aaron, Take a gift, and sacrifice for the people, that they may eat today, and in the morning, as it is now, they may eat in

They shall eat, because their quaking is yet uncircumcised.
12 And when Aaron was come, he offered the gift: and he said, Take ye, for the generations to come, raisins of the grape-cake, cakes of figs, and dates, and grapes, newly ripened, with leaves. 13 And Moses took them, and cast them into the midst of the water, and they became presently a dust, and dimly seen. 14 And the children of Israel did eat, and they did that it named the product after the year of the first release (2003), hoping that it would help to provide a road map of where Autodesk software technology was headed. I agree that a roadmap is a great way to understand where a product is headed, and it has certainly made sense for Autodesk products that came out in the first decade of the 21st century. Well, it turns out that 2023 is the year of the 10th anniversary of AutoCAD, and
