Q: why a duplicated menu acts different? Somehow my menu at the top of my website is duplicated. I am trying to make my top navigation un-fixed, yet I have only been able to un-fixed the menu bar. Please see the image to get a more in-depth view of what I mean. With this un-fixed style, I can still interact with the menu, including hovering with my mouse as well as pressing the anchor tags in the menu to go to the respective page. However, the icon next to the menu is not properly aligned. When I hover on the icon and click on the X to close the menu, the menu disappears but the problem is the icon is not aligned with the menu. When I hover on the icon to go to the Home Page, the menu disappears but all the other icons are still aligned. I have tried using jQuery to fix the alignment as well as adding inline styles to make the menu aligned. This is the styles I added in the CSS file to try and fix the alignment.

Our customers use our collaborative applications to run successful, honest to goodness business operations. One of the most popular among our clients is IBM. In fact, IBM has hundreds of applications licensed for dozens of clients. The largest IBM application, Salesforce.com, has one of the best reputations in the world. You can also run e-mail, file sharing, discussion forums and white boards, and even a full-featured office suite (Microsoft Office). IBM recently announced the immediate availability of a lot of new applications, so weâ€™™ re re-launching our collaboration suite. It is now called OmniGroup. OmniGroup helps simplify work. It makes people more productive, and it helps organizations get more done. I first used OMNG at IBM/Microsoft University. I never would have dreamt that I would work at IBM, but it didnâ€™™ t matter. The approach and the things we worked on were very enjoyable. Since then Iâ€™™ ve used OMNG for many of the applications that we license for IBM. And now,
