The disease process that causes CNV is not well understood. This article reviews the history of CNV, which has evolved into a relatively well-understood disease process and a relatively highly targeted treatment in the glaucoma clinic. Although CNV is typically associated with open-angle glaucoma, there are many other vascular processes that can produce CNV. The discussion will examine the different types of CNV disease processes, their relationship to the immune system, and the role of vascular factors in the disease processes. The treatment approaches will be reviewed, including topical treatments and laser therapy.
