What's new in Dead's Prison Watcher:

s I'm not usually one for shiny add-on stuff. Aircraft mods usually just cost $50 or $100 to buy and never really worth the outlay. And these projects take months of planning/construction. At best, it's something to look at, observe, and maybe buy something to modify eventually. Yet it's hard to ignore the magic of the Beech T-34C Turbo Mentor when you find it wandering abandoned on a railroad track. It's practically begging to be brought back to life. This was my first "public" aircraft build post I've done. It was done out of curiosity and challenge. However, since completing the project, I'm seriously considering entering it as an entry in the FSX Steam Edition Advanced Design Challenge Event. The Aspen Design Competition provides a very unique (and ad hoc) judging process, so a couple of aviation magazines are hopping to "snap" an add-on I'm doing! It's not a done deal just yet, but I'm looking to hookup with Sonexion Aircraft for suggestions on all of the complex engine stuff, like the heads, intake, and carburetor. Regardless, the focus here is not a choice of a designer, just a means of documenting the construction process. This is the long version of "relays and wires" from the previous post. The whole build went smoothly. It's going to be the center-piece of the Beechcraft T-34C contest entry for FSX Steam Edition. Because the Beechcraft have three T-34s in their collection, there will be three flying entries in the contest. So if you would like to see your build appear on the Aviation Hot List, please vote for me. The primary mission of this aircraft is to be a remote control. The lead pilot will be IR in-line with A/C. The ways to do this is to either use remote-responsive meters and eliminate electrical disconnects on the ground, to use aircraft data systems to detect what's on-screen, or to implement a quiet, silent engine and airspeed indicator. There are several USB remote joystick devices available that connect to the PC USB port. These devices work fine, but if you need to employ a multi-zoom joystick, all of the joysticks I've

I haven't got too far but it is in development mode. It's an RPG styled platformer that is quite similar to Mega Man. I don't know how far it has gone but here are a couple of images from it: The value of physical examination in the diagnosis of breast cancer. To determine the value of physical examination in the diagnosis of breast cancer, we performed a physical examination of every woman with a breast mass in a recent two-year period. All patients with any breast problem came to the Mass Mammography clinic. We examined the breasts by palpation and felt hard areas. In addition, we asked the patients questions about any breast discomfort. Only patients without a palpable lump underwent a surgical biopsy. Of the patients with a palpable lump, 111 (98.2%) had a breast cancer diagnosis, whereas of those with no palpable lump, 70 (88.6%) had a breast cancer diagnosis. A palpable lump had a sensitivity of 41.7% and a specificity of 94.6%, whereas a patient with no palpable lump had a sensitivity of 100% and a specificity of 73.2%.
