Negative-Pressure Therapy in Patients Undergoing Limb Reconstruction Following High-Energy Trauma. Prevention of venous thromboembolism is essential in high-risk patients undergoing limb reconstruction following high-energy trauma. Low-molecular-weight heparin and compression stockings are recommended as prophylactic modalities; however, the scientific evidence is not conclusive. The present study evaluated the impact of negative-pressure therapy (NPT) on thrombotic events. Data from all patients (July 2011-June 2013) undergoing reconstruction of peripheral fractures/fasciotomies were retrospectively analysed. NPT was prescribed from the first post-operative day. Out of the total of 128 patients (mean age: 41.5 years; male: 69%), 70 (55%) were treated with NPT compared to 58 (45%) treated without. Six (4.7%) patients in the NPT group presented with venous thromboembolism. No patients with NPT developed superficial thrombophlebitis, whereas two

(3.4%) patients treated without NPT had this complication ( $P = 0.31$ ). However, the incidence of deep vein thrombosis was lower in the NPT group ( $P = 0.02$ ).

Negative-pressure therapy resulted in a significant reduction of post-operative venous thrombotic events in high-risk patients undergoing limb reconstruction following high-energy trauma. We propose to develop a dental fracture model in rats to mimic the features of human dental fracture that is common in people who abuse drugs and ethanol. This model will allow us to study: 1) various forms of intravenous and oral drug and ethanol abuse, both alone and with each other (drug + alcohol), both in adult rats and in young animals, 2) possible neural system involvement in the effects of these agents and 3) more fully evaluate the role of the

Versión original.POMONA, Calif. - About 1,000 children and adults, many of them homeless, gathered in the parking lot of a Pomona bowling alley to speak out against the recent death of a homeless man who was killed by LAPD. Scott Moore, 65, died last week after reportedly being struck by a car driven by LAPD officer who didn't see him. The law enforcement agency's investigation is ongoing. Since Tuesday, the homeless and their advocates have been gathering at the bowling alley. A memorial service was held at another location to remember the
