WE HOPE YOU WILL ENJOY THE GAME WITH US!!
Welcome back to the Democrat-media-industrial-complex's worst nightmare. For the past several years, as many Americans were seeing their lives improve in a variety of ways — economically, socially, educationally — through the brave new world of President Barack Obama, they had to endure the worst two months ever seen by a sitting U.S. president, during which the nation's first black president had been caught covering up a terrorist attack on U.S. soil, arguing that the Supreme Court should not have halted a key provision of his signature achievement, the Affordable Care Act, and his White House was engulfed in controversy, chaos and intrigue. In the process, he managed to alienate a wide spectrum of Americans who no longer believe that his administration is really on their side. Even worse, now President Donald Trump appears poised to make right the damage done to the American people during Obama's unprecedentedly bad two months and, perhaps more importantly, to begin to repair the country's trust in the president, again. After his press conference, Trump declared, “We’ll see what happens with the midterm, but I think we have a chance, and that’s why I want to — I want to — I want to get this whole thing wrapped up quickly. So we’ll see what happens.” To those who are asking why are we negotiating with “the enemy,” he responded: “Because we have had bad people and we’ve had good people — you go back through history, you go back through the annals of every country — and that’s the way life is. And people change. And life’s a cycle. And what happens is, they start out way up.” I’m sure that explains it. “A lot of the people that were opposed to Reagan were opposed to the Vietnam War,” he added. “You know, you can’t argue with success.” And it is true that a lot of the people who were opposed to Reagan were opposed to the Vietnam War, but when those same people spoke out against the elder President, even though he didn’t have the full force and fury of the Soviet Union behind him, they were shouted down.
