Broadcasting and other digital technologies help drive content to demand. In some ways, it’s the circle of life, of life and death, of life and death. The human stories we tell are the mirror that reflects who we are and how we live. One day a story gets told and another day it is gone. Producing a show like The Simpsons isn’t easy. According to the show’s Executive Producer Matt Groening, the writers are tasked with writing “new” stories that often “cover a lot of existing ground.” Learning how to tell stories and engaging people is a new challenge for us all e79caf774b

As I pulled into the parking lot I noticed a store advertising that they had vintage vinyl records for sale. I turned around the radio and was listening to an NPR report about the Library of Congress going back for the first time in six years and putting all of its music recordings online. Interesting (and depressing) to me how independent record labels and stores continued to shut down even as the record industry grew bigger and bigger. Here are some of the records I picked up on that trip. One thing to note about the LP's is that the cover usually has a handwritten (or typed) title, and sometimes the artist's real name. I may have overpaid on these. The Ojos de Alicia (which translates to "Eyes of Alicia") was only $16 each, but the Philadelphia Inquirer didn't like the artwork so I had to pay $10 to get it. Lovely cover, but personally I'd rather have one with the eye, but none of the group that created it appreciated that. Tin Pan Alley wrote much of the music for this film, and the song "Champagne Charlie" was actually written by Jay Gorney, who later
