Download Setup + Crack

A real-life Pro Player tests out the new game engine in-game. The following video showcases a real-life pro player in action with FIFA 22, for the first time ever, before the game is released to the public: An additional video also shows a brand new enhanced direction of attack. One of the great things about the new game engine is that it feels more accurate and real compared to FIFA 21, because the way the artificial intelligence (AI) is presented. Let's take a look at two small but significant enhancements: handling the off-ball actions and off-ball AI. An off-ball player action simulation that is more realistic than in FIFA 21. Great news: you will feel the difference right away in how players act when off-ball. Not only does FIFA 22 put a lot more attention to the off-ball action (defined as, a) player not on the same team as the ball-carrier and b) not on the same side as the ball-carrier), but in FIFA 21 it was barely noticeable. The AI of off-ball players is already great, but in FIFA 22 it feels more reactive to what a defender is actually doing. This is what an off-ball player should do: On the ball, the AI is already very clever and reacts fast. On the ball, the AI is really good at creating something out of nothing as shown below. On the ball, the AI is a bit more passive but incredibly reactive when off-ball. Off-ball, the AI tries to get back on the ball and the reaction is much more immediate. In FIFA 21, if a defender attacks off-ball, he moves away from the ball at the moment you've pressed the off-ball button. At the same time he will be a bit slower, run out of control, and take a look back at the ball. In FIFA 22, the AI reacts much more quickly. The off-ball reaction as depicted in FIFA 21.
