What's new:

- Soccer, Football and Touching Each Other: FIFA seems to “get” the importance of playing the right style of Soccer in FIFA. One of the most impacting gameplay changes is the ability to adjust the Defending Style to a more aggressive or slower “Timing Attack” style after ball recovery. In the traditional Offside Situation, if the ball isn’t at the spot, you can defend, or play a “Bit” of the game. If the second half is about to start, you can go for the tactical approach and slow the game down, making controlling the ball much more efficient. It’s a subtle tweak but one that can add a whole new dimension to the gameplay.
- Weighting Passes: FIFA 22 adds a new weighting system for passing. Pass support is influenced by both the ball speed and lift as well as the height of the ball’s flight. Conversely, the accuracy of passes is affected only by the height of the launch and the launch speed. This is a key example of EA wanting to provide more of a performance, or player’s skills as the game presents it. This change has fewer ramifications on small scale passing but it helps bring Soccer into the realm of Racing Games. The fact that the ball will behave differently based on such a small adjustment to the game’s nature is a positive step to making the game more universal and not too much of a departure from soccer when in fact the impact it has could never be that profound
- Player Aerials - Handling Dips: The pick-up and approach to the ball in FIFA 22 has been changed, allowing players to more closely control the aerial attributes of their passes. Dips and movement is controlled by a more realistic physics system. This makes it possible to reposition players via the touch controls to guide passes away from the defender who is trying to tackle. If executed properly, the game could dictate how players would orchestrate their game and this control could be useful in overtaking.
- Left and Right Stick Dash: Players, and passing lanes, can be moved by connecting the Left and Right sticks to dash towards a player, or to play a Through-the-Leg pass. This inverts FIFA’s manually controlled “Hit and Run” style, which needed the player to use those shots while making a dash. The difference in FIFA’
