Norfolk Amateurs The Norfolk Amateurs was a men's golf team founded in England in 1909. It was founded in 1909 as a touring team to visit Scotland. The number of members fluctuated according to the form of the individual players, and from its inception to 1932 had four senior teams (non-amateurs), three intermediate and two junior teams. The Amateurs took part in numerous tournaments, including international tournaments, and even played on occasions against the professionals. The Amateurs' best performance was in the 1923 final of the Amateur Championship, where they led by two strokes going into the final round. Jock Hutchison scored 73-75=148, giving him a two-stroke victory over Bill Campbell-Russell (75-67=142), and Edward Waisman (76-65=141). Formation 1909 the Norfolk Amateurs was founded following the "merger" of the East Anglian (Hove) Golfers' Union and the North East Norfolk Golfers' Union. The first secretary was Mr. R. F. P. Hefford of Hove. The team was made up of amateurs and included Jock Hutchinson (captain), Basil Langdale, Oliver Pope, W. C. Cartwright, and E. O. Nicholas. The first match played was against the University of Nottingham and was won by the visitors by one hole. The match against the University of Essex was equally one-sided with the Amateurs winning by eleven. In September 1909, after returning from Scotland, the team went on tour, playing in the Northumberland Invitation, followed by the Scottish Open and then an exhibition match for the Cup on the links at Turnhouse. 1910 was less successful as a team as some members decided to become professionals, but nevertheless there was one close run thing as the pair Hutchinson & Cartwright, by two shots, were level on 30 points with Archie Simpson & James Frazer, with the latter the winners by virtue of better handicap, just the barest of points. 1911 proved to be the best year as they took the Northumberland by four strokes. The team went on to take part in several major tournaments, including the 1913 British Amateur and the 1913 International Tournament, where they recorded their

What's new in Gander National Park:

Malcolm Archer was 20 when the Bengal Mutiny broke out in 1857. Now 90 he is still living, still watching the sun rise and set at the age of 191, but his life has hardly been an uninterrupted celebration of every aspect of 21st-century life. For nearly 80 years he was a young man in the naval intelligence service of the Indian Navy. He was responsible for keeping the British rulers of India's commercial fortunes safe from rival European powers. He was sent on mission after mission from one far off port to another. On his birth certificate the date of his birth is incorrectly given as "28th September 1859", but that is all anyone will ever know. The young Archer was born just days before the paper tiger kingdom of Johor invaded Sarawak on the northern coast of Borneo. It was a time when Sulu's Sultan Akil Velan was the most powerful ruler in the area. Rather than prepare for war, the Sultan went on holiday to Singapore where the British Company's "Old Woman of the Sea" (the fortification whose walls half-trickled with gun-fire) was visited by him and other Sulu officials. Meanwhile back in Sarawak, the Sulu's younger cousin Raja Tun Saadudin arranged for the arrival in KL of a visiting boat from Sulu and Berthin, the Malay galley that would later carry him to a throne in Las Hulu. In Singapore, the British watched Kuala Kini's new monarch and his officials ride away on their spectacular horse-drawn carriage. In London they looked at Akil Velan's palace and thought about how safe Johor was for S. India's trade. In Sarawak, they watched Raja Tun Saadudin meet his Malay counterpart, invite the Sultan to return to Sarawak and defend the state's sovereignty against Sulu. As the company official in KL went through the receipts of the Sarawak trade that Akil Velan had arranged just a few days earlier, he was stunned to notice that the Sultan's expenses for the transporation of a "cargo" worth more than 1,500 pounds are far higher than Akil Velan's. As it turned out, the "cargo" was a gun boat and what Akil Velan was buying was Sulu's
