! The Unwinding of James Dean Late in the summer of '59, I ran into a young man named Neil, who was James Dean's 20th cousin, close enough to be mentioned in the newspaper accounts of his death. After several tense exchanges, I asked Neil if he really felt like a close relative to James. He shrugged. "I don't know. Maybe. He's an actor, you know?" I leaned forward with sincerity. "Yes, I know. But even though he was an actor, he was real, wasn't he? He had a real life, didn't he? He wasn't just some actor." He gave a snorting, dismissive laugh. He did not want to say yes, though he sensed there was something there. "James Dean was an actor; he wanted to be a star. He was famous. Mostly known as the 'action hero,' but he wanted to be a star. I'm John." Then the conversation dropped. It seemed not only that my question didn't interest him

It could be that a personality quickly forms, or it could be several personalities. But whatever the reason, I believe that people come into our lives for various reasons, and that our interactions actually shape us. Two years ago I met an old man in NYC whom I had never seen before. We got to talking, and he started drinking my beer and talking with me. Talked with me. It seems odd, but he opened up to me. During the evening he showed me pictures of the decades of his life. There were few places he was not a regular, and many
