In the interim, we’ve lost more of our best-loved friends and family, and lost a select few along with them. (Our days of toast and the Gilmore Girls were numbered.) In honor of the end of the series’ run on Sunday (July 27th) at 9pm ET/PT, we asked our readers to offer up memories of “Gilmore Girls.” The responses run the gamut, but the answers have us reminiscing, and reminiscing doesn’t hurt these feelings. [MORE: 100 Best ‘Gilmore Girls’ Quotes] “When I was a girl, we didn’t have cable, and when we did it was before the internet. ‘Gilmore Girls’ was the only thing. It was an innocent and great escape. It was a time I liked the most.” —Editor’s note: This reader is referring to the time period leading up to the setting of “Gilmore Girls,” when the internet was still a novel concept and if you wanted television you had to catch it on station WOTC or get it by mail. “I got so many great kisses out of that show.” —Editor’s note: We don’t know what time period the quote is from, but we assume the first half of the 2000s. “Back then I had to sit on the floor to see the screen 0cc13bf012

We investigated whether BMI and body fat in children is associated with adult type 2 diabetes. This was a prospective study of 47 children followed from age 9 to age 31. Diabetes was diagnosed by oral glucose tolerance test, insulin sensitivity (S(I)) measured by the euglycemic-hyperinsulinemic clamp, and beta-cell function (B(0)). We used multivariate logistic regression analyses, adjusting for sex, pubertal stage, family history of diabetes, and body fat/BMI at age 9. The incidence of type 2 diabetes increased with age, from 10.9% at 9 years to 32.6% at 31 years. Children with newly diagnosed type 2 diabetes (n = 14) had higher body fat and BMI compared with participants who never had diabetes (n = 33) (27.5% vs 21.3% body fat, P = 0.05; BMI, 17.3 vs 16.9 kg/m², P = 0.03). Body fat and BMI at age 9 were positively associated with type 2 diabetes in adults. Children with high body fat at age 9 showed a higher risk of type 2 diabetes at 31 years of age (OR 2.0, P = 0.01). When stratified by BMI, the risk increased with BMI from age 9 to age 31 (P

I'm in my first year of graduation from school, and am (sober, and hopefully anemic, and less pudgy) much more likely to post than in years past. I've also got a 100% jobless recovery—unless you count unemployment as a job—and an economy that doesn't even feel like it has a job recovery, but more like the economy is just coasting on fumes, just waiting for everything to blow up again. The job market is still absolutely horrible for new grads. My degree is in music therapy and has nothing to do with The Real Economy. I cannot pay rent with my degree, and my girlfriend cannot even get a job (though she has a few interviews lined up). It was earlier this week that I posted an article to Facebook about the insufficient state of our economy. A friend of mine read it, posted a short (but heartbreaking) comment of her own, and suggested I post some poems on here. I had no idea how to start, but I remember being inspired in high school, to translate into words things I had been feeling and thinking. This friend's comment started me thinking of old poems I'd written and then lost, poems that were trapped in my subconscious or imperfectly thought through, that I had all but forgotten about. I began writing some poems, and keeping them in a file on my desktop. Last night, I finally decided it was time to share. So here they are, the companion to my article about the insufficient state of the economy. I hope that in the months and years to come, some of you will find yourself in the same circumstances as I did. Homes, rotted by you, Where the rats crawl through our windows, barking for food. Our neighbors still go to work every day or see friends who do. Young blood, like us forget that there's a thing called a recession. There will be another. Another time our houses will splay across the street like writhing serpents. What will your sons and daughters say when they've had children of their own? They'll ask When will it end?
