, I know it's probably frowned upon, but I have been googling for a couple of hours and tried a couple of different suggestions but I just can't get it to work. Thanks for any suggestions though. A: (my response is under the question, for some reason SO limits it to 1059 characters for new posts) It looks like there's just too much stuff in there. I've made the modifications suggested by @MichaelXXX and it's working for me so far. I'll report back with further progress. Story Highlights Research from the University of Illinois and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst shows that after a storm, the hydraulic fracturing (fracking) wastewater that spills into rivers, streams and groundwater may contain antibiotics, an endocrine disruptor and a mix of both. The study of hydraulic fracturing wastewater also shows that salts, metals and other pollutants often found in fracking wastewater can be surface-appearing but remain underneath the layers of soil and rock in underground water sources, in part because those water sources are fed by groundwater. "We just found these amazingly large concentrations of antibiotics and these very high concentrations of salt, and we knew that those were going to be common, especially among frack-spewing wells," said corresponding author Emily Waite-Pewthers, a research associate professor in the Illinois Department of Natural Resources' Center for the Environment and Land Sciences, and a fellow in the Illinois Natural History Survey (INHS). "The rest of the information we were looking for was right below our noses." Waite-Pewthers presented the findings of her research March 18 at the International Conference on Groundwater Contamination and Spill Response: Science, Policy and Prevention. "This study shows there is a lot of fracking taking place in Illinois, and I think it's a critical step for us to have this study, because we've long believed that wastewater was a big driver of pollution in Illinois," Waite-Pewthers said. "If we'd known that we were going to find some pharmaceuticals in our wastewater, we probably would have done something about it." Researchers found antibiotics in the wastewater from wastewater wells around the state, as well as from the basin of Lake Erie, according to Waite-Pewthers' study. When soil and rock are pressed by the weight of impermeable layers of shale and sediment, the shale and sediment create
