Osteomyelitis, chronic infections of the bone following trauma or surgical debridement, is relatively common in patients with diabetes. A diagnostic delay of months to years can lead to many complications including limb amputation. Since the initial studies by Zidovudine in the 1980s, there have been no major breakthroughs in the management of diabetic foot infections. Most currently available therapies are either inadequate or have significant side effects. To date, clinical studies of a diagnostic agent, which might allow earlier diagnosis, and a treatment agent, which would prolong treatment with minimum side effects have both been reported in the literature, but no combination of the two agents have been tested in a clinical trial, let alone a trial in diabetic patients. Using a murine model of diabetic osteomyelitis, I have demonstrated a 3 fold increase in bone bacterial burden and a 10 fold increase in bone marrow bacterial burden in diabetic mice. Based on my finding, I hypothesize that there will be a significant decrease in infection in diabetic mice if a diagnostic agent is administered in combination with a treatment agent. The present proposal will address whether antibiotic treatment can be made effective if we can diagnose the infection earlier. Our specific aims are: 1) to test the following 6 treatment agents in combination with gatifloxacin, our lead diagnostic agent, for efficacy in treating osteomyelitis in diabetic animals: tobramycin, cefazolin, cefuroxime, ciprofloxacin, fusidic acid and rifampicin 2) to test the following 6 treatment agents in combination with gatifloxacin, our lead diagnostic agent, for efficacy in treating sepsis in diabetic mice 3) to test the 6 treatment agents in combination with gatifloxacin as part of a pilot human clinical trial and to collect human serum samples to determine if there is any anti-microbial and anti-inflammatory activity in the combination that is lacking in either agent in isolation. PUBLIC HEALTH RELEVANCE: Osteomyelitis, chronic infections of the bone following trauma or surgical debridement, is relatively common in patients with diabetes. The goal of this application is to develop a combination of a diagnostic agent and a treatment agent for diabetic foot infections. The information from this study will hopefully lead to clinical trials to test this combination in diabetic patients. More than 70 federal elected representatives have signed a letter asking the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) to release an estimate of the

Q: Intersection of groups and the center Let G be a group with $n \geq 2$ elements. Suppose H, K are subgroups of G with $H \cap K = \{1_G\}$. If H and K are of index 2, then $|G : (H \cap K)| = 2$. A: You can prove this by easy induction using the fact that $G = G' \cup \mathcal{C}_G(K \cap H)$. Roles of the adult bile acid transporter bile salt export pump in regulating intestinal cholesterol and bile acid transport. The purpose of this review is to summarize the current understanding of the role of the multi-functional membrane transporter, bile salt export pump (BSEP), in regulating the transport of bile salts and cholesterol into bile, thus regulating plasma and biliary cholesterol levels. Once BSEP was identified and characterized by the laboratory of Lars Hedegaard, the molecular biology of the transporter was explored at the cellular level, where the expression of BSEP is regulated by different mechanisms and at the clinical level, where BSEP mutations are associated with cholestatic disorders in humans. Data obtained from human genetic and animal models support the hypothesis that BSEP is involved in the regulation of lipid absorption and transport, bile acid-bile salt homeostasis and liver lipid metabolism, with important implications for the pathogenesis of lipid-related cholestatic liver diseases and biliary atresia. Bile acid-dependent modulation of BSEP function is also likely to contribute to the biliary concentration of toxic bile acids. Finally, emerging evidence suggests that there are unexpected links between BSEP and other membrane transporters in both gut and liver that may provide new insights into the mechanisms involved in the regulation of lipid absorption and bile acid-bile salt homeostasis.
