I was browsing and discovered this awesome list! Thanks for sharing as usual, this post gives off such a powerful vibe. Burns Love Potion. I think it's sarcasm. The humour's a little fuzzy though because I've seen it done to death. There's a long running blog about it, which I discovered by accident earlier today, here: I didn't enjoy it myself but it gets by because it's a creative work. I think the reason it gets so popular is because of all the tits. The plot is kind of a shallow one, but I like the idea of the film. It's a comedy with monster tropes, with a few interesting twists thrown in as well. I wonder if it'll come to be a cult hit like something I almost cannot bring myself to bring up. He is the director of The Little Sister, which won the Cannes award in 1994. In 2010, he created a new company called "Second Life" with the aim of continuing to make movies about the different types of social pathologies that he believes we encounter daily. In the midst of an affordable housing crisis, the city of Seattle offers the most expensive rent in the nation. And even as the district's elected leaders negotiate the city's next budget, they are planning a broad overhaul of city rules and regulations that could push even more people out of a city they see as a business incubator. The proposed change in zoning rules — even if they are not adopted — could upend an array of programs and serve as a warning to any other city that would like to continue to push for tech-driven economic development. Rising housing prices across the country are the focus of an upcoming ballot measure in California that could see a price freeze on rent in the state. Seattle has several questions of its own — starting with the fact that housing starts have fallen nationally and the number of new units produced is even lower. The number of homes built in Seattle has been essentially flat over the past three years, according to the U.S

``` - No `Ta` ao mesmo tempo que o `b` e `a`. Search This Blog "By the way, you're drunk" - Jay Mohr The alcohol was kicking in, and I needed to get out of the house. I was never what you would call a party person, the only party I would attend was for my birthdays. Not exactly a great fan of happy hours and/or picking up girls in bars. Not after a couple of tequila shooters. But hey! I'm in Chicago and they have an amazing Italian place there called Bump's -- which is not actually a restaurant, but rather a liquor store. This is definitely a great place to grab a drink. There is enough space to put all your drink bottles and such on the floor. I needed a whiskey, and I was told it would be easy to find at Bump's. "No problem, just look around in the stuff marked (the bottle is for the fire)", the helpful bartender said. I did. And found a bottle of Jameson that I had never heard of before, called Youth and Age. The little description on the back said that this is 100% aged whiskey. I had no idea what age meant, so I pulled the bottle from the shelf and looked at the back. "See this? This is youth! And this is age!" said the bartender. "What does that mean?", I asked. "It means you can drink this but you cannot drink this." "How do you know which one to drink?" "How old are you?" "Fifty-three." "Are you old?" "No, but I got older yesterday." "Then you cannot drink this." As if that were not perplexing enough, this was the wrong bottle. I had been looking for an older bottle of Jameson. "See? I told you it was no problem." So I left, and my cold, over-served and inebriated self walked back to my cold, over-served and inebriated apartment. I was never in that place after 9:00 at
