Data are from the four experiments with different cells (n = 10-11)](50-2-181-tb005){#b15} Mean values of density and viscosity were measured by the end of the experiments (Table 1 in Appendix{ref-type="app"}). Discussion {#sec4} ===== Icing of fallen snow can cause changes in snow properties, and consequently decrease the snow mass and affect the development of the snowpack ([@bib3]). At present, the most effective way to avoid icing is to move snow cover to a safe place to melt the ice, or to cover the snow with plastic sheets or cloth to protect it from direct solar radiation. Another approach is to reduce the rate of snowfall during winter ([@bib3]). Previous studies demonstrated that the INTC of snow can affect its freezing ([@bib1]). The freezing of the snowpack depends on the lower freezing temperature of snow at the INTC or greater depth of the snowpack ([@bib10]). In the present study, the mean INTC of fallen snow in the Büyükçekmece crater is $-19.7 \pm 0.3^\circ\text{C}$, which is lower than the freezing point of the surrounding air, and is within the range reported from other measurements performed in Ankara ($10\text{--}25^\circ\text{C}$; [@bib7], [@bib5]) and in other parts of Europe ($5\text{--}30^\circ\text{C}$; [@bib6], [@bib21]) and Asia ([@bib25], [@bib11]). However, the INTC values of snow on the south and east sides were significantly lower than those in the west side. Although no precipitations were observed on the south and east sides during the measurements, possible INTC of the north side of Büy

Dendritic cells in healthy subjects and HIV-infected patients: 1. Distribution of the phenotype and HLA-DR expression. Langerhans cells, interdigitating dendritic cells and the type of CD45RO-positive lymphocytes. The distribution and phenotypes of dendritic cells in the peripheral blood (PB) and lymph nodes (LN) of HIV-infected patients were analyzed with flow cytometry. In HIV-infected patients, CD45RO-positive/CD3-negative lymphocytes were increased in the blood ($62 \pm 15\%$) and lymph nodes ($81 \pm 11\%$) compared to healthy controls ($37 \pm 10\%$, P
