It is the ultimate record of the spiritual development and guidance of Imam Ali. In the area of security, network providers are hard at work creating a more secure internet. As a way to thwart hackers, the providers make an effort to use strong password encryption. At the moment, passwords are quite easy for hackers to crack. However, if people can come up with a stronger way to lock down their passwords, then they can make their networks a bit more secure. A team of researchers at UC San Diego was given the challenge of coming up with a way of using liquid crystals to alter the way human passwords appear on screens. The technique takes advantage of some liquid crystals' natural properties to effectively create invisible passwords to lock devices. Some of liquid crystals' most common properties are that they are isotropic, meaning they have the same properties from all directions. An isotropic liquid crystal should be taken advantage of to make a screen display that can't be hacked. Currently, the screen displays only part of the password when it's typed into the field. Other parts of the password are hidden behind the liquid crystal. The researchers tackled this problem by creating a liquid crystal that has anisotropic properties. This means it can be manipulated to alter the way it works. The team took advantage of this property in a three-dimensional display screen by using a liquid crystal that forms into shape using anisotropic properties. This allows the liquid crystal to change its shape depending on the way it's angled. Specifically, the researchers created a screen that could be programmed to display a different shape depending on what part of the field the user is typing in. If the user types in the first letter of a password, the liquid crystal may be shown to appear like a square. The next letter the user types in may be rotated to complete a circle on the screen. As the user types more letters, the liquid crystal may get narrower until it reaches an end. However, the liquid crystal will only change shape when the screen is being manipulated. Researchers claim the liquid crystal based-display is extremely transparent and can be used in any electronic device. This technique is different than the previous cryptography method because it takes advantage of how liquid crystals are used to make a stable display. The research was recently published in the journal Nature Communications
