Making a custom template for your design projects can save time and effort. Before spending a lot of time crafting a custom template, there are a number of online websites that offer downloadable custom templates. Using Photoshop for Social Media Instead of using standard white background layouts for your social media images, use a custom designed background. That way, you won't look like an amateur.

Designing your social media background Many online sites offer custom background designs. If you're not able to obtain a background via an online service, you can design your own. Follow these steps to design your own background for social media sites: 1. Choose a background color. The color of your page background will vary depending on what you're using the background for. However, here are a few color schemes that you can use as your guide: Blue, green, and purple — These colors are classic for logos, business cards, and websites. They also have a universal appeal. Orange — Orange (or sunset orange, as this color is sometimes called) is a great choice for children's websites, business cards, brochures, and print materials. Pink, red, and brown — These colors tend to be used for weddings, Halloween, and Christmas. White — Aside from using white as the background on a website, you can also use it to create an image that represents a solid color, or for the image of a person. 2. Sketch your design. Ideally, the resulting background will be on a printed piece of paper, but you can work on your design by using a digital image or even by drawing directly on your computer. 3. Create a PNG or JPEG file. After you draw your design, save the image as a JPEG or PNG file format, which is the most commonly used file format for social media images. To find a JPEG or PNG file on your computer, first navigate to its location in the Windows Explorer program (see Book I, Chapter 2 for instructions on finding and accessing the Windows Explorer program). Then double-click the file to open it in the program. When the program opens, go to the Save As option at the bottom of the screen. Select the desired option, choose where to save the file, and then click Save. 4. Upload your file to your online site. To create your image, use a program like Microsoft Photo Editor to convert your image into the Hypoallergenic mouse strains in the study of contact hypersensitivity. Mice with a genetic background of the A/J (H-2a) strain are often used as recipients of immune cells from donor mice after being sensitized to e.g. contact haptens or allergens. For the investigation of the role of T cells or in the case of innate immunity cells, sensitized mice are frequently treated with cyclophosphamide and/or irradiated just prior to cell transfer. This is due to the fact that an immunocompromised recipient e.g. a nude or an SCID mouse, will be more susceptible to tumours. The sensitized mice are transferred with syngeneic cells or T cells derived from the donors. However, this severely affects the results as the T cells are rejected before they can have an effect on the recipient mice. There is therefore an urgent need to find an appropriate alternative method to study allergic reactions in mice. It should be simple and more applicable for many researchers. This study will present a set of different protocols for the induction of contact hypersensitivity (CH) in a hypoallergenic recipient. Irradiated mice on the LEW background (H-2p) were sensitized with DNFB (2,4-dinitro-1-fluorobenzene). The mice were then crossed with C57BL/6. The offspring were challenged with DNFB and CH was measured. The results showed that mice of the F1 generation (H-2b) did not develop CH when sensitized with DNFB using the standard protocols. This was also confirmed when the sensitized mice were re
