Patch clamp techniques were used to examine the effects of externally applied Zn2+ ions on voltage-activated ion channels from the ventral cochlear nucleus (VCN) of rats. Zn2+ reversibly activated two outwardly rectifying channels when added to the bath of inside-out patches. The concentration dependence of channel activation was measured in the presence of 300 microM tetraethylammonium (TEA). Activation of the first channel required approximately 10 microM Zn2+, whereas the second channel required > or = 30 microM. Activation of the Zn2+-dependent channel kinetics was assessed at different holding potentials and displayed voltage-independent kinetics in three of four patches tested. Kinetic parameters of single channel currents were obtained from the open-state dwell-time distribution generated from a series of 10-ms segments of continuous current records. The amplitude and frequency of the open-state dwell-time distribution were found to be voltage-independent within experimental error. The Zn2+-activated channel displayed a unitary conductance of approximately 25 pS and a single channel current-voltage (I/V) relationship that was essentially linear. The activation of Zn2+-dependent channels by microM concentrations of Zn2+ was inhibited by millimolar concentrations of Cd2+ or Ca2+, whereas Ba2+ could only partially inhibit these channels

Spokesman Colonel Christopher Garver claims that this is the first time the Damascus government employed TNWs. According to Colonel Garver, "The Syrian government has reportedly launched more than six ballistic missiles in the past month at the outskirts of Aleppo, including Damascus, reaching a level of accuracy that suggests the use of TNWs." It was said that the missiles' accuracy equaled that of a TNW - a weapon of mass destruction that is capable of penetrating an urban area by hitting key targets like residential areas. Col. Garver also stated that the increased activity of such weapons was not a coincidence but a "definite action by the Syrian government." New intelligence estimates also agree with Col. Garver's statements. The 2013 Long-Range Strike Map, unveiled by the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR), provides an estimate of Syrian chemical weapon capabilities. The CFR claims that the analysis shows that between March 2013 and July 2012, the Syrian government increased its chemical weapons program by over 10 times. The analysis of Syria's chemical weapons program included information from open sources, intelligence reports, and Syrian opposition forces. This suggests that if true, the Syrian government has acquired expertise in Syria's chemical weapons program that indicates their use of sophisticated means of chemical and biological warfare. Col. Garver also stated that this was the first time the Damascus government employed TNWs. From May 2011 until the present time, he explains, there has been a "sovereign" Syrian government. Col. Garver claims, though, that this is only the first time he has heard it since September 2012, when the Russian military entered Syria. He states, "To the best of my knowledge, no one has made this claim about the Damascus regime." In the end
