For the last few years, horror filmmakers have known what they had to do in order to make their next big thing: Make an extremely cheap yet sleazy horror flick. (See: Shaun of the Dead, Evil Dead.) We're very happy to report that while our geniuses at IGN are no longer being held down by budget concerns, the same level of low-budget crappiness we've come to expect from low-budget horror flicks is going to be all the rage for the rest of 2010. How so? It's called the $60 zombie movie. Yes, that's right: The movie in question is less than $60,000. In fact, it's the most inexpensive zombie flick ever made. And not only that, but it was made by some of the most creative people out there. Yes, it's the Dead Dog From Hell, written and directed by Rodman Flender and Jeff Burr, produced by Adam Davidson, and starring Kelly Conklin and Jamie Hendry. (Directed by J. Elisabeth Gardner). Dead Dog From Hell is set in a world where a band of humans are barricaded in a post-apocalyptic shelter while a huge pack of zombies attempt to kill them all. They have no weapons, but that doesn't stop them from forming a small, makeshift band to kill the zombies. And it all goes downhill from

You have to open the folder where your Autocad install is. In the folder, find and open the file "autocad.exe" Now run the file, and you are done.

Are constipation and inflammatory bowel disease different conditions? Constipation and inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) are both chronic disorders affecting the gastrointestinal tract, causing great distress and disability to the patients. Although constipation and IBD share some features, a number of important differences exist between the two disorders. Evidence is presented showing that constipation and IBD are different in etiology, pathogenesis, and management. In addition, the responses to available treatments, such as laxatives and mesalazine, are different between the two disorders. Treatment recommendations for constipation and IBD differ greatly and there is no cure for either condition.

Laurel Hollister missed the entire season with an injury to her ACL. Fortunately, the draft came and went and despite her injury and the possible departure of her mom, she was drafted to the Los Angeles Sparks. Her rookie season was not as short as a lot of people made it out to be and she even made the All-Star Game. But to get the best out of her game, she has to be in shape. And that means some hard work and sacrifice.

Exercise Room At Home: The simple life approach to exercise is one that I've been trying to stick to in the offseason. Although I'm not training for any particular sports, I want to keep myself in the shape that I need to be in to play. I'm a power lifter, and my knee has to be ready to go in order to play. But not all power lifters are at the same level. So I figured I'd be a smart one and work at home to make myself a stronger, leaner woman. A few months ago I decided to start working out at home every day. This means, when the days are nice, I workout in the morning, come home and eat lunch, workout again in the afternoon, then rest for a few hours and do it all again in the evening. I find this approach to be very effective for making quick gains in fitness. I never get bored or feel like I'm not accomplishing something. Walking is also a very effective form of exercise. I like to walk every day. Walking every day makes you feel good and it's easy to
