For example: I have a home network, I can access some servers on this network from outside using the home IP, but how can I do this with an external IP address? For instance, if I want to access www.google.com from an external IP, how can I do this? A: You'd need to create a local DNS entry for www.google.com, or get a DDNS hoster like no-ip.com or dyn.com, and then have your DNS server point at them. Once done, you'll need to instruct your router or whatever DHCP server you're using to hand out different IP addresses depending on what hostnames it resolves. If you go to the DNS settings on your router or DNS server, you'll find a box that says something like "Resolve these hostnames from these IP addresses", and you'll need to type in the IP address that is passed to your router in order to
